There are many different stories about the history of the umbrella. According to an old Chinese story, the umbrella was invented by Lu Ban's wife about 3,000 years ago.

Lu Ban was the most famous craftsman in ancient China. One day, Lu Ban and his wife were walking by the West Lake. They were enjoying the beautiful sights when it suddenly started to rain heavily. After they returned home, both of them were soaked.

"It's terrible to get wet in the rain," Lu Ban's wife said. "Can you make something to keep the rain out?" The craftsman replied, "I can build some pavilions(亭子) along the West Lake. You can hide under them when it rains."

"But pavilions can't move," Lu Ban's wife shook her head. "Is it possible to make a movable pavilion that will always follow people when they walk?" She thought about this question for a long time. One day, Lu Ban's wife saw some children playing in the rain. Each child was holding up a large lotus leaf (荷叶) to keep out the rain. She got a good idea from that. The next day, she made the first umbrella in ancient China.

At 8,844.43 meters high, Mount Qomolangma is the tallest mountain on Earth. While it is famous for its beautiful views, parts of the mountain are facing a problem: garbage. Every year, thousands of visitors throw away tons of garbage. The garbage found on Mount Qomolangma has caused serious pollution. It is bad for water farther down in the mountain's valley. The polluted water and soil on the mountain has already been a cause of environmental concern (担忧) in China, Nepal and India.

According to the UN, over 140 tons of garbage has been left on the mountain. To deal with the garbage, China started to limit the number of people who were allowed to climb up the north side of the mountain in 2019. Only 300 people will be allowed to climb it, and only during spring.

Local residents collected about 8.4 tons of garbage at heights of 5,200 meters and above in 2018. The local government is also setting up stations to sort, recycle and break down garbage collected from the mountain. A group of artists will also try to turn the garbage into artwork. They will show these works of art to remind people not to leave garbage behind when climbing the mountain.

The focus is for the mountain to be climbed in a scientific and green way. Nowadays, people (including mountaineers and local people) are more aware (意识到) of the importance of environmental protection.
